EDWARD CARYL'S SUDDEN DEATH

Over Exertion During Storm on Way to Grand Army Meeting-Lived but Fifteen Minutes After Reaching Home

Edward Caryl of No. 73 School street, well known as a painter in this city, although he had not worked at his trade for several years, passed away quite suddenly about 10.45 o'clock Friday evening at his home. He had not been swell for a week, but his death was probably hastened by overexertion in the snowstorm Friday evening.

67th birthday. When the two boys were about three years old their parents came to live in Windsor Locks, Com. The two brothers always lived together and had resided at times in New London, Prospect, N. Y., and Oswego, N. Y., and came to Norwich about forty-three years ago.

They enlisted together at Oswego, been swell for a week, but his death was probably hastened by overexertion in the snowstorm Friday evening.

He was a veteran of the Civil war and had started out shortly before 8 o'clock to attend the meeting of Sedgwick post, No. 1, G. A. R., to which he belonged, but was taken sick on Main street, reaching home again about 16.30 o'clock, without going to the meeting. He passed away about fifteen minutes after reaching the house. His heart was not supposed to be weak, as he had recently been examined by a physician and his heart pronounced normal.

Mr. Caryl was born near Lisbon, Portugal, Aug. 12, 1841, and was one of twin sons, John A. and Edward Caryl, the children of John A. Caryl and Mathilda Williamson, who were natives of England. His twin brother, John A., died suddenly of heart disease in this city on Aug. 12, 1908, his which proved one of the big affairs of the season.

Whist was played from 8.45 until 10.30 o'clock, the large dining room being filled with tables and players, and it was necessary for many to play in the parlor of the hotel. The big gathering was finely taken care of, the management of the hotel having been painstaking and thoughtful in looking after the requirements of the big party. It was one of the most successful affairs ever conducted by the parish and Revs. J. J. Smith and W. A. Keefe were thoroughly delighted with the result. The proceeds, which should be large, will no to the poor of the parish. In general charge of the affair were Miss Mary E. Hartle and Mrs. Jeremiah F. Healey, and they had most capable assistants in looking after the many details, among whom was Joseph Donnelly, who directed the was Joseph Donnelly, who directed the entertainment. During the evening, home made cake and candy, as well as ice cream, were on sale, and all were disposed of, neton sale, and all were disposed of, netting a good profit.

At 10.30 o'clock the entertainment programme opened in the dining room and was a particularly delightful part of the evening. Miss Nellie J.
